Voyageurs Take the Name Seriously!!

By Mark Crofts and Susan Graham

Group of 1812 Paddlers, including members of the Voyageur Trail Association

In keeping with the Voyageur name, a number of VTA members joined in a canoe paddle from Sault Ste. Marie to Fort St. Joseph to commemorate the attack and capture of Fort Mackinac at the start of the War of 1812. Two "Montreal canoes" and two "Northwest canoes" as well as a double kayak left the Sault on Sunday, July 15, under sunny skies to the cheers of onlookers at Belleview Park. All along the way, paddlers were greeted by homeowners and cottagers on shore, as well as boaters.

We stopped for lunch at Squirrel Island, and were greeted by two pontoon boats full of cottagers. After lunch and a swim, we set off again, hoping the winds would favour us while crossing Lake George. The weather co-operated, we were in full song (although we had to revert to English camp songs, as many of us only knew one French song, and you can only sing "Alouette" so long!) and making great progress. We were feeling the heat, as well as our muscles, as Richards Landing came into view. As tired as we were, we had to put on a good show coming in for the people who had assembled on shore! The tall ship "Welcome" was there to greet us, too, by firing its cannon.

Supper was at the Legion hall, then most of us hit our tents early, as we had to do it all again on Monday. Some brave souls thought they would sleep under the big canoes on the beach with the re-enactors. They soon discovered the mosquitoes were worse under the canvas placed over the canoe than sleeping outside.

Even though their sleep wasn't the best, Mark and Cheryl were treated to a fabulous display of the Aurora Borealis when they moved outside to sleep in one of the canoes.

After a hearty breakfast, we hit the water again. There were now three Montreal canoes in the flotilla and two Northwest canoes. A few faces had left the group, and a number of new ones had joined, so it meant shuffling people's positions in the canoes. We were treated to a cookie break at Sailor's Encampment, followed by a tremendous lunch at Sunset Point hosted by the Young family and joined by their neighbours. Again, residents were coming out to greet us – we even had fireworks while passing one place. The enthusiasm of the onlookers was wonderful to see.

At lunch, it was decided that because of the rising wind and accompanying waves, we would remove the two smaller canoes from the water. Some paddlers elected to stay behind and help move all the gear, while the rest were reorganized into the three larger canoes for a 4-hour paddle into a headwind to the Fort. We arrived without incident – but it felt so good to stop paddling! Supper was provided for us, and, again it was an early night. The mosquitoes chased everyone into their tents at dark, although Ila and a few others could be observed directing the Sault College van moving canoes until later on.

On Tuesday, we were joined by still more bodies, as well as two birch-bark canoes (the third one was launched, but wasn't going to make it around the point above water!) The plan was for the canoe flotilla to come around the point and meet up with the tall ship Welcome and the brig Niagara, but an approaching freighter changed plans at the last minute. Hundreds were at the Fort to greet us, and we made an impressive sight in our Voyageur garb. By now, we were well-practised in our salute, too.

This was a wonderful experience for all who took part. The organization and planning was excellent, and Mark Crofts is to be congratulated for spearheading it. Thanks for the memories!

WARNING: NOXIOUS WEED

The Giant Hog Weed has been spotted in some sections of the Voyageur Trail. If you see it, DO NOT TOUCH IT. This plant is phototoxic, and "touching it can result in blistering, long lasting scars and—if it comes in contact with eyes—blindness." (source Wikipedia). More information can be found here http://www.simcoemuskokahealth.org/Libraries/TOPIC\_Environment/Giant\_Hogweed.sflb.ashx

New Trail Sign at Cobre Lake by Emily Windle

Local hikers now have another reason to visit the Cobre Lake Trail north of Elliot Lake. Through the efforts of Alan Day there now is an attractive sign at the trail head. It has photos of plant and animal life found along the trail. It also has a map of the 11 km trail.

Saturday, June 16 an enthusiastic group of friends from local nature clubs gathered to show their appreciation to Alan Day for his work in arranging to have the new sign. After six years of persistence the sign is now reality.

Different members of local nature clubs and retired MNR personnel spoke about Alan's long lasting dedication in keeping the local trails open for all to enjoy.

Alan thanked those other volunteers who helped him in so many different projects as well as this new Cobre Lake Sign. He was presented with a plaque that has a quotation from Walt Disney: "If you can dream it, you can do it".

This is so true for Alan.
