REMEMBERING FATHER MEGAN

Charter Member Father Arnold Megan died recently. Dieter Ropke fondly remembers Father Megan with a few words.

One of a kind, intrepid, these all full of joy, Father Arnold Megan will be remembered for his irreverence, his dry chuckle and mocking grin so full of mirth.

It was vintage Father Megan who pulled out and shared a green plastic Mylarla antacid bottle on a hiking trip to Cockburn Island. The bottle was full of whisky. When asked about his generous supply of such bottles, he revealed that one of his colleagues had a severe stomach ailment, and in his own words "I just told him to keep up the good work" (so he could get the empty bottles for hiking).

On a more recent hike and potluck supper on a hot July day, Father Megan failed to show up as planned. When we came out on the bush utterly exhausted, we were greeted by Father Megan in a lawn chair reading a book. By his side was a full cooler of refreshing drinks which he had brought for us. When he could not make it to the hike, he parked his contribution for the potluck, a 4-litre container of ice cream, in a fridge he found in a shed of the McGuire family (our neighbours). Asked whether he knew these people, he replied in the negative. They were not home when he called but the cook at St. Mary's College also went by that name and somehow he deduced that all McGuires were related sooner or later. It is fortunate that these people and their kids did not come home to discover the sweet contribution first.

Father Megan was also known for his love for fast cars and loud contemporary music. Young at heart, he had tremendous influence over many fine young people growing up under his care.

Father Megan we miss you, this place is not the same without you.

FORESTRY PRACTICES HEARINGS - VTA COMMENTS

On August 29, Steve Taylor represented the Voyageur Trail Association in making a presentation at the Class Exemption for Forestry Practices hearings which were held in Sault Ste Marie during that week.

These hearings are of vital importance to the future of Ontario's forests. The Ministry of Natural Resources has applied for a Class Exemption for commonly used forestry practices. If approved, it means that a lot of forestry operations on crown land will not be subject to environmental assessments. The Environmental Assessment Board is now gathering evidence and information with which to make a decision on this matter. The Voyageur Trail Association was invited to make a presentation before this board.

One thing noted by Steve and Bill Robinson (who attended the hearings also) is that all forestry operations must be public knowledge and if someone thinks that a certain forestry operation in an area is a problem, an assessment can be requested for that situation. Thus, if a portion of our trail is scheduled to be logged, the Voyageur Trail Association could potentially still have input.

Steve noted that we have received very good cooperation and information on proposed forestry operations on Crown Land from the Ministry of Natural Resources up to now. He expressed concern that this should continue in the future. He noted that if logging is to occur near the trail, the MNR usually places a buffer around our trail as a condition for a company to be granted a cutting license. In spite of this, a portion of trail that was given a buffer was logged several years ago. The company was asked to restore the trail, but the ground had been so chewed up that VTA members had to go in later to reroute it. Steve felt that the penalty for violating a condition such as this must be severe enough that a company will not violate that condition either on purpose or accidentally. Concerns were also presented about blown down trees in buffers that are too narrow, and the potential problems of pesticide drift into buffers. Lastly, Steve suggested that consideration be given for a buffer of at least two kilometres in width around Lake Superior where no logging would occur. The reasons given were 1) that the coast of Lake Superior deserves special attention because of its scenic qualities and hence tourism potential. Buffer areas should not be visible from the shoreline. Two kilometres would suffice in most areas. 2) the area near the lake is rich in natural diversity. Two kilometres of protected area is needed to preserve this diversity. 3) Much of our trail and proposed trail is within this area.

HIKING IN THE WAWA AREA DRIFTWOOD BEACH TO TREETBY LAKE

In late 1989, the Michipicoten Section of the Trail was extended south from Bridget Lake near the Lake Superior shoreline to Noisy Bay. At that point, it connected with an old canoe portage out to the road near the Fenton-Treetby Lake canoe route parking lot. By midsummer of 1990, this trail was complete except for two sections that had only been blazed and needed patrol and brushing. I agreed to lead a backpacking outing along this piece of trail on the August 4-6 long weekend. Virve Manniste-Squire, Rachel Squire, Steve Seaborn, Barry Cooke, Paula Jalvilo and Richard Archer were willing guinea pigs for the latest of my ideas for a backpacking experience.

We met in the Rabbit Blanket Campground on the Friday evening. It was a warm, humid, cloudy evening and a storm appeared to be brewing, but nothing happened that night. Before heading out in the morning, we had breakfast and repacked some gear and food. Why is it that we always seem to leave half the gear in the car at the last minute? I gave a fiery demonstration of my Optimus flamethrower and then cooked breakfast on Virve's stove.

The journey began at the head of the trail at Fort Friendship near the mouth of the Michipicoten River. The first part of the trail was mainly uphill, along a creek, between rock walls, and over sphagnum, spruce and Labrador tea clad rocks. We poked around in a small cave part way up. At the top was a magnificent view of Driftwood Beach and Michipicoten Harbour. We then descended to the lake to eat lunch on the rocks along the shore. It was very humid and we were all perspiring. The sound of thunder rumbling over the lake encouraged us to eat our lunch short and continue on.

The rain began partway up a long uphill climb to Bridget Lake. We crossed a creek at the end of a picturesque pond which offered a view of the surrounding hills. The hills were now shrouded in mist, and we walked into this mist as we continued to climb. For a while, a dark, thick conifer stand offered shelter from the rain, but soon it was raining heavily, punctuated by the occasional gentle rumble and one loud crash of thunder. By the time we reached Bridget Lake, we were all quite wet. Some of us had not bothered to put on a raincoat due to the warmth of the air, and those that had were wet due to sweat. Thus, the next hour or so was rather uncomfortable until the rain finally petered out and the mist disappeared.

Our path followed a wide trail on a ridge just west of Bridget Lake which was visible through the trees in places. Soon, it crossed a creek. We were into another area of labrador tea, sphagnum moss and stunted black spruce, all on rocks. The trail was flagged and cleared here, but not blazed. It was nevertheless easy to follow. The problem was walking. We sank into the soft moss with our feet, and often staggered as we hit uneven rock underneath. Pachel with her shorter legs must have had a difficult time. We were high above the lake here, and there were a couple of magnificent views. After a difficult descent and climb, we were rewarded with a spectacular view of Smoky Point, which was to be our campsite for the night. The sky now had some blue holes and the point was being bathed by the sun. We then climbed down about 250 m to the point through a valley and through a couple of dikes, where the trail was surrounded by rock walls. This scenic descent ended the hiking for the day around 5:00 pm.

As we reached the beach, we hung gear up all over the place to dry and some of us went for a swim. Tents were pitched on the rocky beach and supper was cooked and devoured. Richard commented on the scenic qualities of this area by noting that while he was taught to work with lines in his graphic arts class, nature worked very well with curves. We lit a fire, but we didn't keep it going for long as we were all very sleepy.

We were all rudely awakened in the middle of the night by a brisk north wind which came up suddenly. I got up to gather some clothing and fasten my extra tent lines to rocks. Barry had pitched his tent closest to the lake and the waves were spraying it. I wondered how he got any sleep.

The next morning, a chilly north wind blew into the campsite. It was an ideal morning for a quick, hot cereal and a hasty exit onto the trail.

The trail went into the woods and then came out at a postcard cove just south of Smokey point. Several wrens disappeared into the driftwood as we approached. Then we began a long difficult climb up through several spectacular rock chasms.

The trail at this point was cleared and flagged with blue tape but not blazed. We left Smokey Point in two groups and as we neared the top of the climb, I was still in the back group with Barry and Paula. The trail became flat, in fact it was the easiest trail we had been on so far. After about a kilometre, we arrived at a major two-lane paved highway. The hiking would have been easy along this route, but the transport trucks would have distracted us from the wilderness experience. Even more disturbing were the facts that there were not supposed to be any highways along the trail, and the other group was still not in sight. I surmised that we had gone out on a trail that was used to access the hiking trail for its construction. I also hoped that the others had gone the right way. We went back and picked up the hiking trail just below the top of the climb up from the lake. I forged ahead to catch up with the first group, who I knew would be having lunch. Luckily, I reached them after about a kilometre and suggested that we stay closer together.

I ate lunch under a big spruce on top of a ridge with Lake Superior spread out below me to the west. Then came a descent into a thicker type of forest. From here to Noisy Bay, a distance of about 1 1/2 km, the trail had been flagged but not cleared. Much of the trail went through a dense thicket of balsam fir, white and black spruce and a variety of hardwood shrubs such as mountain maple and alder. The going was very tough here as we often could not even see the uneven ground we were trying to walk on. It seemed to take forever to get to Noisy Bay, and near the end, we came to a discouraging climb.

Finally, we descended to the Lake along a rocky wall, and came out on a point. We hopped along onto the rocks into the bay. We arrived at our campsite at 4:00 p.m. after a 9:30 a.m. morning departure.

Noisy Bay is an arching cobble beach guarded in the back by a mammoth pile of driftwood. Noisy Creek rumbles out of the woods in the middle of the beach. We set up tents and went swimming in the lake. In most places the water was very cold but there was warm water where the creek entered the lake. Also, it was fun to get carried into the lake in the current and then swim back on the side. After supper, I explored around the bay and found a flat level spot designated as a campsite behind the log pile. It was too late to move there. We absorbed a pink sunset between a few light showers, and talked around a blazing fire for a while. The conversation was interesting, but at this time, I can't remember any of it. I must have been tired. I crawled into the tent and remained oblivious to the world until about 8:00 a.m.

We awakened to a beautiful light blue sky over the dark blue lake. After a warm breakfast, with everything wet spread out to dry on the beach, I explored the woods on the south side of the bay. I came out on a big flat rock which provided a view over all of Michipicoten Harbour. This lookout will have to be on the part of the trail going south from here to Old Woman Bay. The walk out to the highway was not difficult, but it was very scenic. We waited by Noisy Creek for a while as it gorged its way over rocks down to the lake. We followed Noisy Lake for about 200 m. This is a picturesque triangular green lake tucked between some tall forested slopes. The last piece out to the Highway went gently uphill, over a ridge, across a creek and beside a small lake. An hour and a half after leaving Lake Superior, we were at the car, left with only memories, some photos and dirty clothes to remind us of the weekend. Hopefully, we are only left with the memories and photos.

Patrick Capper led a group in to paint some of the trail North of Smokey Point in September. The Lake Superior Provincial Park staff has also been working in the park since our trip. I believe most of the trail is easy to follow, but I'm not sure if it is all painted yet. When it is, this piece of trail will be a "must" for any serious backpacker. It is not long, but it is not easy because of the long climbs. It offers many views from up high, and many spectacular moss clad rock dikes. These dikes left the strongest impression on me. From Fort Friendship to Smokey Point is around 7-8 km. From Smokey Point to Noisy Bay is about 6 km. It is about 2 km out to the road from Noisy Bay. These distances are deceptive because of the up and down terrain.

TRAIL MIX

T-SHIRTS AND SWEATSHIRTS!
Order your VTA tees and sweats today for this year's Christmas gifts. To ensure early delivery, please have your order in to Susan Graham by NOV. 15!! 949-4105

We now have a display in the Nawa Information Centre that should get some attention. It includes a large map and some coloured photos. This display is courtesy of funding from ELABT (Crown Land as a Development Trail). We also have some posters, courtesy of this source of funding, that have already been posted around Alouma and elsewhere.

The Voyageur Trail Association in conjunction with the Township of Terrace Bay oversaw an Environmental Youth Core Project this summer to clear the Casque Isles Section of Trail. This trail is now hikeable throughout its length. It has received rave reviews from those who have done it in the past, and hopefully, it will get many more hikers in the future. Thanks to Corne Bourke and Pete Stinnissen for spearheading this.

Another result of the funding was adding some new tools to our inventory. The VTA has acquired, among other things, a new SHDL chainsaw and a brush saw. If you can use these tools during trail maintenance, please contact Paul Syme with your requirements. 942-9806

In last issue's Trail Mix, I incorrectly reported on the banning of insecticides containing DEET. In fact, the questionable chemical is an additive known as R-11. It has caused tumors in lab rats and forced some manufacturers to recall their product. Only about 25 percent of the repellents on the market use the additive, formally known as 2,2,4,5-Bis (2, Dicyclohexyl) tetrahydro-2-furaldehyde. The technical name appears on the labels.

Congratulations to Bill Robinson, our only member who completed all the hikes in our four-part series of end to end hikes through the Saulteaux Section of trail.

Another end to end hiker this year was one of our southern Ontario members, Grant Hall, who hiked the Avon Trail end to end. What was unusual about this outing, was that Grant and fellow hiker Peter Juknoys covered the 100 km distance in 21 hours and 47 min, all in the same day!!! Grant tells of his experience in detail in the Spring 1990 issue of the Avon Trail Newsletter and in Hike Ontario's Fall 1990 OUTLOOK.

The editor has on file, newsletters from all other hiking clubs in Ontario. These newsletters are available on loan to anyone interested in reading about other clubs. These would be of special interest to anyone planning to visit an area that has hiking trails maintained by these clubs. As in the VIA news, hike schedules are listed.

ELEPHANTS SIGHTED ON VTA OUTING

On Aug. 25, 1990, Susan Graham led a group of about twenty walkers on a hike of a different sort. We decided to leave our trail and conquer the wilds of downtown Sault Ste. Marie. We began our trip at the locks and took the nature trail onto the islands by the rapids. We noted that much of the wildlife of the area was documented on signs. Several people mentioned that the vegetation was quite thick and diverse compared to what is seen along the trail. Choke cherry, alternate leaved dogwood, jewelweed and tansy were all identified.

Leaving the island, we passed the Sea Lamprey Control Centre and the fairrace, and proceeded along the new boardwalk along St. Mary's Drive. The boardwalk is a welcome addition to the Sault. Many salmon fishermen, young and old, were trying their luck along the river, but the only salmon spotted were swimming in the water.

We then headed to The Jolly Friar where we sampled some home brew and were given a tour of the brewing facilities.

After leaving the pub, we passed in front of the Sault Memorial Gardens, and here the most interesting wildlife sightings were made. Several elephants were seen walking down the sidewalk. The exact number was disputed, but it seemed that at least three elephants were present. The last time elephants were reported in the Sault was several years ago on New Year's Eve. This time, the elephants were grey, and even the coffee drinkers saw them. (But were they really drinking just coffee?)

Finally, we arrived back at the locks and we parted. Thanks Susan for a different but enjoyable type of hike. Judging by the response, we should do it again.
